QUAINT MOORISH CUSTOMS

ed in Everyday Life. New York, June 25.—In contrast to som-Northern nations, it is hardly too much to say that the Moor, of whatever class, is born a gentleman. There is such a grace about the humblest, such an easy dignity, that - whenever - circumstances place them in positions calling for the exercise of courtesy, they very seldom fall to respond, and thus it comes to pass that in a demogratic nation, in which every man of ability-cunning, perhaps would be the better word-may rise to the highest place, even though he start life as a slave, the self-proclaiming parvenu is practically non-existent. This is not, however, to imply that gaucheric and the unpleasant manners which come from evil dispositions or stupidity are un known. Unfortunately, the life led by the average Moor, is one that dwarfs refinement of intellect, as it does development of mind, and the vices to which the majority succumb in early life too often stultify the most prominent commence-ment. Probably much of the graceful party to give and return the greeting though in the country several often de so. Inferiors saluting superiors usually kiss the hand, shoulder, top of the tur-ban, or feet, or the kness or siltrup of a horseman, according to the terms or which they approach. The more abject forms are naturally only used to implore a favor, though they are employed some-time to Europeans. In the extremity of supplications the very feet of one's horse

Cot. Buffington smiles—that was all.

When the Government adopted the disappearing gum invention Cot. Buffington asserted in the specification that he dedicated the patent to the United Stargs to have, state or buy elsewhere, without payment of royalties. Asked about such a reckiese disregard for opportunities for wealth he said yesterflay:

"Everything I have invented I have given to Uncle Sam. Why shouldn't I? I received my education at his expense, and all that comes out of my brain certainly ought to go to Uncle Sam and will go to him."
